Recognizing the passive voice in their writing, creating weak prose that is difficult to understand. Recognizing the passive voice in their writing, creating weak prose that is difficult to understand. Recognizing the passive voice in their writing, creating weak prose that is difficult to understand. Recognizing the passive voice in the active voice will make your writing. style more vigorous and easy to read. Recognizing the Passive Voice In passive voice constructions, the person or thing that does the action is buried at the end of the sentence in a prepositional phrase or is not stated at all. The thing that something is being done to is the grammatical subject of the sentence. Take a look at the following sentence. The report was misplaced. What is the thing that was "misplaced"? The report. Notice that it is the grammatical subject of the sentence. Who misplaced the report? The writer does not tell us. The person who does the action, arguably the most important element of the sentence, is not even mentioned. This sentence can also be rewritten in the following manner, to include the person who misplaced the report (often called the "agent" or "doer" of the action). The report was misplaced by Mr. Jenkins. Notice that the writer chooses to hide Mr. Jenkins. Notice that the writer chooses to hide Mr. Jenkins. Notice that the writer chooses to hide Mr. Jenkins. Notice that the writer chooses to hide Mr. Jenkins. Notice that the writer chooses to hide Mr. Jenkins. characterized by the use of the verb "to be" (is, was, were) as a helping verb to a main verb in the present (ing) or past (ed) participle. Rewriting in the Active Voice The most recognizable and comfortable sentence pattern in English is "Subject + Verb + Object." The subject is usually the agent, as in "Joe hit the ball," which is in the active voice. Compare "Joe hit the ball" (active) with "The ball was hit by Joe" (passive). To rewrite a sentence in the action. If no agent or "doer" of the action that the agent is doing and make that action a verb in the simple present tense or past tense (hit, the verb in simple past tense.) Identify the thing that the subject is doing something to. (the ball). Rewrite the sentence, placeing the agent in the subject position. Passive Voice is Appropriate at Times There are times, however, where the passive voice is Appropriate than the active voice. For example, if you consciously want to hide the agent or if the agent is not really relevant, use the passive voice. For example, the sentence, "The Baseball Writers Association voted Andre Dawson into the hall of fame." lacks the proper emphasis should be Andre Dawson was voted into the hall of fame. This is one case where the passive voice is more appropriate than the active voice. But remember; this is the exception. In general, use the active voice in your writing will have more vigor and be easier to read than if your writing is full of passive constructions. Active and Passive Voice Writing The difference between writing in active and passive voices lies in the way the action in a sentence is presented and how the subject of the sentence performs the action. The focus is on the doer of the action, making the sentence more direct and clear. Active voice is generally preferred in writing because it is more concise and easier to understand. It is also considered more engaging and dynamic. Example: The dog (subject) chased (verb) the cat (object). Passive Voice In passive voice, the subject of the sentence is acted upon by the verb. The focus shifts from the doer of the action to the receiver of the action. Passive voice can sometimes result in sentences that are less clear or more wordy, but it can be useful in certain situations, such as when the doer of the action is unknown, unimportant, or deliberately being omitted. Example: The cat (subject) was chased (verb) by the dog (agent). In general, it is a good practice to use active voice whenever possible to make your writing more clear, concise, and engaging. However, there are situations where passive voice is appropriate or necessary, so it is essential to understand both and use them effectively. Improving your ability to write in the active voice involves developing a better understanding of sentence structure and practicing the skill until it becomes second nature. Here are some tips to help you improve your ability to write in active voices, as explained in the previous answer. Knowing the differences will help you recognize when you are using passive voice and make it easier to switch to active voice. Identify the subject (the doer of the action) and the verb (the action done to it. Practice rewriting sentences. Take sentences written in passive voice and practice rewriting them in active voice. This exercise will help you become more comfortable with the process and better recognize passive constructions. Use strong action verbs, such as "is," "are," "was," or "were," which can often lead to passive constructions. Minimize the use of "to be" verbs "is," "am," "are," "being," and "been" often signal passive voice when combined with past participles. Try to minimize their use and opt for more active verbs instead. Be mindful of your writing style. When writing, be conscious of your tendency to use passive voice. Make a deliberate effort to use active voice, and over time, this will become more natural. Edit and revise. After writing, go through your work and identify any instances of passive voice. Rewrite those sentences in active voice to strengthen your writing. Read and analyze other texts. Study examples of writing that effectively use active voice. Pay attention to how the authors construct their sentences and convey action. This will help you learn from their techniques and improve your own writing. Seek feedback. Share your writing with others and ask them to specifically comment on your use of active voice. They may be able to point out instances of passive voice that you missed and offer suggestions for improvement. Practice regularly. Like any skill, writing in active voice improves with practice. Write regularly and consistently practicing, you will improve your ability to write in active voice, making your writing clearer, more engaging, and more effective. How to Write in Passive Voice is appropriate or even necessary. To write in the passive voice, follow these steps: Identify the subject and object - Determine the subject (the doer of the action) and the object (the receiver of the subject and object - In passive voice, the focus is on the object or the subject in the sentence. Rearrange the sentence so that the object comes before the verb, and the subject (if included) comes after the verb. Use a form of "to be" according to the tense and subject of the sentence. Add the past participle of the main verb - The main verb in passive voice sentences is in the past participle form (e.g., written, eaten, played). Combine the agent (optional) - If the doer of the action is relevant or necessary for context, include the agent by adding the preposition "by" followed by the subject. However, in some cases, the agent may be unknown, unimportant, or intentionally omitted, in which case you can leave it out. Here's an example to illustrate the process: Active voice: The experiment (subject) was conducted (verb) by the scientist (agent). Remember that while it's important to know how to write in passive voice, it's generally best to use active voice in your writing for clarity and engagement, unless a specific situation swhere passive voice. Situations where passive voice in your writing for clarity and engagement, unless a specific situation calls for passive voice. were discovered in 1940." When the focus is on the action or the receiver of the action: "A new method has been developed to improve battery life." When the focus is on the process or results, rather than the researchers: "The samples were analyzed using gas chromatography." In such cases, using passive voice can be an effective choice to convey the intended meaning. Page 2 This worksheet is about differentiating between active voice as sentences where the subject performs the action and passive voice as sentences where the subject receives the action. The worksheet provides examples of both active voice for this exercise. The purpose of this worksheet is to teach students how to convert sentences from passive to active voice, which is often preferred in clear and concise writing. It helps students identify the subject at the forefront of the action. This exercise is designed to enhance students' grammatical skills and their ability to write with clarity. By practicing this skill, students learn to communicate more effectively in their writing.
