Major refers to something greater in significance or rank. Main denotes something chief or principal.Major and main are two words used to signify importance, prominence, or dominance in various contexts. Major is usually used to denote something of greater importance, rank, or degree and is often associated with significance in terms of size, amount, or degree. Main, conversely, is used to describe something that is most important, principal, or chief, typically emphasizing its primary or central role in the context it is used.Major is often employed to convey importance in terms of degree or intensity, such as a major change or a major difference, highlighting the significant impact or magnitude of the subject. Main, however, is primarily used to describe the principal or central subject, entity, or thing in a given context, indicating its prevailing or dominating role, like the main road or the main entrance.Major can also be used in specific contexts like academic degrees, military ranks, or music to denote higher status, greater significance, or specific characteristics, underlining its versatile nature. In contrast, Main is more straightforward and is generally used to signify the primary or predominant subject, component, or aspect in various scenarios, pointing to its more limited and specific usage.In situations where significance or importance needs to be stressed, Major is used to convey greater magnitude, significance, or impact, making it suitable for scenarios where the intensity, degree, or extent of something needs to be emphasized. Main, on the other hand, is more suitable for situations where the chief, primary, or principal subject, component, or aspect needs to be pointed out, emphasizing its central or prevailing role. In essence, while both Major and Main signify importance and prominence, Major leans more towards significance in degree, size, or amount, and Main leans more towards being principal, chief, or central, marking the primary or predominant subject or component in various contexts.Greater importance, significance or degreeChief, principal, predominantVersatile, used in varied contextsSpecific, denotes principal or central rolesCan denote specific characteristics in certain contextsMore straightforward, denotes chief or primaryCan be used in academic, military, etc. contextsTypically used to denote the central or primary component or subjectUsed to signify greater magnitude, significance or impactUsed to signify the principal, central, or chief component or subjectMajor can refer to a specified field of academic study.She is pursuing a major in economics.Main implies being largest in size or degree.The main road is blocked due to construction.Major is used to describe the greater of two modes in music.The piece is composed in a major key.Main refers to the principal pipe conveying water or gas to buildings.A leak in the main pipe caused water to flood the streets.Greater than others in importance or rankMain means the high sea or open ocean.The ship sailed out into the main under a clear sky.Most important; principal.Great in number, size, or extentThe major portion of the population.Exerted to the utmost; sheer"They took her off the sled by main strength" (Jack London).Requiring great attention or concern; very serious(Nautical) Connected to or located near the mainmast(Law) Legally recognized as having reached the age of adulthood.(Obsolete) Of or relating to a continuous area or stretch, as of land or water.Of or relating to the field of academic study in which a student specializes.The chief or largest partHis ideas are, in the main, impractical.Designating a scale or mode having half steps between the third and fourth and the seventh and eighth degrees.The principal pipe or conduit in a system for conveying water, gas, oil, or other utility.Equivalent to the distance between the tonic note and the second or third or fourth or seventh degrees of a major scale or modeFought with might and main.A commissioned rank in the US Army, Air Force, or Marine Corps that is above captain and below lieutenant colonel.One who holds this rank or a similar rank in another military organization.One that is superior in rank, importance, or abilityAn oil-producing country considered as one of the majors (Lew) One recognized by the law as having reached the age of adulthood.
